

Ukraine: life and resistance in a society attacked by Russian imperialism

University of Salzburg

Geographies of Uneven Development

Lecture series theories and debates in geography (855.232)

Lectures in hybrid form online per Webex and in lecture room. Webex dial-in data and auditorium information will follow.

Dec. 13, 2022 18:00-20:00	Simon Pirani , London. Honorary professor at the University of Durham, author of Burning Up: A Global History of Fossil Fuel Consumption (Pluto Press, 2018) and writes at peoplenature.org	The limits of western economic war with Russia and the failure of climate policy How can we understand the economic war being waged alongside the military conflict, the resulting disruption of energy markets, and their place in the broader social and ecological crises shaking capital?
Dec. 20, 2022 18:00-20:00	Ilya Budraitskis , Political Scientist. He teaches in Moscow school for Social and Economic Sciences. He is author of the book Dissidents among dissidents. Ideology, Politics, and the Left in Post-Soviet Russia (Verso 2022)	Why Putinism is a new form of fascism. Putin's regime has over twenty years experienced a gradual evolution from depoliticized neoliberal authoritarianism into a brutal dictatorship which can be characterized as a new form of fascism.
Jan. 10, 2023 18:00-20:00	Oksana Dutchak , Kyiv/Leipzig. PhD in social sciences, Berliner Institut für empirische Integrations- und Migrationsforschung. Co-editor of the journal Commons	Care labour before and during the war. How did governmental policies in care sectors shape gender inequality in the society? What was the role of networks and unions in these sectors? How all these influence society during the war and the vision of the future reconstruction?
Jan. 17, 2023 18:00-20:00	Denys Pilash , Political scientist, associate professor at University of Kyiv, Co-editor of the journal Commons , member of Sotsialnyi Rukh (Social Movement)	Popular resistance against the Russian invasion Why is it important to support Ukrainian resistance and why this resistance has far-reaching effects of the further developments in Europe and the world?
Jan. 24, 2023 18:00-20:00	Natalia Lomonosova , Sociologist, Kyiv. Researcher at Cedos (Centre for Society Research), member of Sotsialnyi Rukh (Social Movement)	How the war changes society. How the war has influenced vulnerable populations, how it deepened existing vulnerabilities and social divisions; how it has influenced the sphere of work and economic situation of households in general?