Abstract

The UNESCO Chair on Sustainable Management of Conservation Areas was founded in 2019 at Carinthia University of Applied Sciences, Villach, Austria. Since then, our research group has participated in more than 50 projects on regional, national, and international levels. The current talk will highlight key findings, transferrable experiences, and innovative approaches to conservation management and biodiversity monitoring. We discuss potential future directions of the research of the UNESCO Chair in Europe and beyond, including collaboration with diverse stakeholder groups to empower actors to participate in biodiversity conservation.
