Primary research projects

The Limits of International Lawyering within Government: Legal Advisers and International Crimes

This project focusses on the specific role that government legal advisers have in advising on international law and state violence, and explores ways of thinking about the responsibility for such legal advice in light of the particular institutional context(s) within which these lawyers operate. Publications in preparation:

- Monograph: 'The Limits of International Lawyering within Government: Legal Advisers and International Crimes'
- Article: 'From Cold Language Games to the Heat of Battle: Government Legal Advisers and State Violence' (currently under review)
- Book Chapter: 'Rethinking the Role of Legal Advisers in State Violence' (in preparation) in H.P. Aust & H. Krieger (eds.), Reconstructing International Law (Oxford University Press)
- Article: 'International Law as Enabler of State Violence'

Self-Presentation in International Law

This project springs from my PhD research and explores how actors present themselves to others through their engagements with international law, and what implications this has for the practice of international law. Publications in preparation:

- Article: 'On Virtue and Vanity in International Law: The Making of Self-determination in the General Assembly 1945-1960'

Other publications in preparation:

- Article: 'Three Responses to Indeterminacy in International Law'
