

From Pupils to Policy: Multilingualism and Education

Billions of multilingual speakers throughout the world are often stigmatized depending on the ideologies surrounding the particular language varieties in given contexts. Linguistic capital is frequently interconnected to broader ideas of nation-building and the mechanisms behind the commodification of language. This lecture series explores ways that multilingualism is negotiated at different social and structural levels: individuals, family planning, educational systems and national language policy.

Talks take place in room 3.208 at 17:00, with reception to follow.

All welcome!

Further details for each talk will be sent out in advance.
